Improve your applications with Cover Flow "Cover Flow" is a feature that allows the user to navigate quickly and easily through several images at the same time. It consists of images that are displayed in a circular way, creating a visual effect of spinning around. The transition between images is smooth and the user can flip through as many images as needed. If you work with large images, it is advisable to create a folder of “Sequential Set”, so you can create up to five sets of images and, as the number of sets increases, the images are automatically loaded in the correct order. You can create folders of images to be placed in sequential sets and indicate the order in which the images should be loaded. To create a folder of images, click on the [+] button in the main navigation panel and select “Create Folder”. Select the folder of images you want to include in the sequential sets. The folders can be created as you are creating the sets, or you can insert images into them after the sequence has already been set up. Once the sequence has been created, press the [-] button. A dialog box is displayed that contains the name of the folder of images. If you created the folder of images before adding the images to the folder, the images will be loaded in the correct order. If you added the images after the folder had been created, you can
